

The Right Theory of Astrology

by David R. Roell, 2013

I have shown the development of the following in essays which can be found, on-line, in various issues of my newsletter, <http://www.AstroAmerica.com/Newsletters.html>. These have been collected in my various books, to which you are referred. There is also an overview in the forward to my edition of George McCormack's Text-book of Long-Range Weather Forecasting. What follows is a summary:

The Sky is Empty

Nothing comes from nothing. The zodiac is made up of the elements of Fire, Earth, Air and Water. None of these are present in the sky. All are present in the Earth.

Nothing comes from nothing. Each of the twelve signs of the zodiac is qualified by one of three states, Cardinal, Fixed, or Mutable. These are states of energy: The quality of having energy is cardinal. The quality of resisting energy is fixed. The quality of seeking energy is mutable. The sky is devoid of all forms of energy. The earth has all three. Therefore,

The Zodiac is of the Earth

The zodiac represents the twelve basic energetic states of the Earth. As such, the zodiac is not a circle, but a grid of three energies mapped against four elements. There are exactly twelve possibilities, there cannot be 11 or 13. This grid represents the greatest possible simplification, the greatest reduction, of the whole of creation itself. Understanding the interplay of elements and energies is therefore fundamental to understanding life upon the Earth, and is a prerequisite in all studies of the material world. Here is the fundamental grid:

	Energy (Cardinal)	Resist (Fixed)	Seek (Mutable)
Fire	Aries	Leo	Sagittarius
Earth	Capricorn	Taurus	Virgo
Air	Libra	Aquarius	Gemini
Water	Cancer	Scorpio	Pisces

The names given to these combinations are traditional. We can call them anything we like. The quality of resisting energy, which is traditionally known as fixed, can as easily be termed, stagnant. Hence, Scorpio, being fixed or resisting water, can also be called stagnant water, which has long been known to be dangerous. Sagittarius, which is known as mutable fire, can also be termed, sparks seeking to start a blaze.

Earth as Automaton

If the Earth was isolated in the sky, these twelve qualities would be dormant. It is the interaction of the Earth with the Sun, Moon and other planets which sets these various energies into motion. Realize the Earth is more than big enough, and more than close enough to the other planets, to have exactly this kind of interaction, which it then radiates outwards from the center. The signs of the zodiac are the inherent vibrations of the Earth itself.

These interactions are made possible by the crystalline nature of the planets, and, I presume of the Sun itself. Researchers Lars Stixrude, of the University of London, and Ronald Cohen, of the Carnegie Institute of Washington, D.C., have speculated the core of the Earth to be a single gigantic iron crystal. They have further speculated that crystal to be six-sided. Six relates to the zodiac, in that there are six faces and six edges, six "male" signs and six "female." Confirming twelve overall.

Many meteorites have been found to contain the metal hexahedrite, which is a six-sided crystalline form of iron. Meteorites are known to be the busted-up remains of dead planets. It is therefore likely that if the Earth has a crystalline core, so do all other planets as well. Additionally, the Earth has a crystal covering, which is water. Water forms six-sided crystals when frozen, mimicking the central crystal.

The Earth's zodiac is organized around the alignment of the Earth's central crystal with the Sun's presumed central crystal. (The core of the Sun is not nuclear, but that is an argument for another time.) These alignments happen at the solstices and equinoxes. We have thus established the Tropical Zodiac as an objective, scientific, fact. The zodiac shows the relationship of the Earth to the Sun. (The Sidereal Zodiac is based on the Earth's wobble, which is itself an artifact of solar and lunar gravities. It functions as a chronocrator and is used as such by all sidereal-based astrologies.)

Planets in the sky are intercepted and tagged by the Earth with the qualities of the signs in which they appear to be, since it is the Earth which generates those sign energies. The Earth has twelve pairs of "rose colored glasses," if you will. It is the Earth that assigns Aries to one part of the sky, Leo to another. It is the Earth's 12-sided (duodenary) nature that explains the traditional Ptolemaic aspects, which are all facet-to-facet and facet-to-edge phenomena. Neither signs, nor aspects, nor houses, apply to stars because they are outside the interactive planetary crystals that comprise the solar system.

Houses are produced by the daily turning of the Earth's crystal on its axis. The crystal is thus the single source for signs, houses and aspects. The northern and southern ends of this gigantic crystal are known as the Earth's magnetic poles.

The Earth's crystal, and therefore the Earth as a whole, vibrates according to the relative positions of Sun, Moon and planets. Each planet has a natural affinity for some parts of the Earth and not others. We term the parts of the Earth that resonate best to Mercury to be mutable air and mutable earth, in other words, Gemini and Virgo. When we put the zodiac in the Earth, rather than the sky, we understand how a planet in one sign can be said to rule a planet in some other, for instead of jumping about in an empty sky, we are merely describing the internal workings of the Earth's crystal.

Since the Earth is vibrating, everything on the Earth is vibrating in sympathy with it. So whenever anything on Earth divides or breaks in two, the existing vibration of the smaller part will be replaced by the Earth's current vibration as of that moment. This, in fact, is strict physics. When a child is born it loses its mother's vibration and takes on the Earth's vibration. Because of her greater mass, the mother's vibration changes, but only somewhat. She has a significant transit. By comparison, a plant, because it grows as part of the earth and is in vibrational harmony with it, does not experience "birth" until it is cut, or harvested.

Birth vibrations age over time, as all vibrations must. As there are many levels of vibration (the Earth is a huge mass) astrology knows this aging process by many names, among them, primary directions, secondary progressions, solar arcs, Vimshottari dasas, Yogini dasas, etc. When aged vibration matches up with current planetary placements (transits), a significant event can occur. When transient vibrations are greater than the individual can withstand, death ensues.

It is clear that as the human body is made up of the elements of the Earth, that various regions of the body will be ruled by the various signs, which will then be influenced by the casual placement of the planets to which they have an affinity. It is not true that Mars directly affects me, but it is true that as my body is made up of elements that are influenced by Mars, that the Earth's response to changes in the relative position of Mars will produce an appropriate response in those Earth-based Martian elements in me.

Planetary energies in fact adhere closely to the inverse square law. The Sun, due to its staggering size, and the Moon, due to its sheer proximity, are the primary influences in our lives. They are unvarying, as their distances never change. Mercury, Venus and Mars provide personal details. Which fluctuate, as they come and go. Jupiter and Saturn, much further away, are known as social planets, as they provide background. The outer planets, the Uranians, the asteroids, effect us to the extent they make tight aspects to closer bodies.

Nor is the doctrine of "falsifiability" a valid objection. Astrology is falsifiable in the same way a trip in a car is falsifiable, as both deal with time. The same car, the same driver, the same route, but no two trips can ever be alike. Every trip, every individual, is unique in time. None of this will satisfy science, which will remain hostile to astrology by reason of its very existence.

You can wait for forecasters to guess at the weather, or you can get an ephemeris and study the raw energies. With astrology you may predict weather as far in advance as you like. Or anything else. You may know the fate of the planet itself.

Astrology is the study of the Earth. How the Earth relates to the Sun, Moon and planets, and what that means to the creatures that crawl on its surface. Astrology is the one fundamental science, surpassing all others.

For those who have understood this, a great many ideas will be buzzing in your heads. Try them out!
